: packed to the max Welcome to my third in a series of after effects projects! I'm finally back after a very very long break. The last project in the series was a time lapse of the sun rising and setting and this project is a time lapse of all the color changes within each frame. I'm very excited about it! What's on my plate? Well, I'm trying to catch up on emailing and answering all of the questions that I got after the last project. I'll continue to get back to doing the project because there's a lot of free time on my hands but it's going to take a little time. I'm going to do my best to get back on schedule with them! More info will be added as I go along! Problems I encountered? Well, I think I chose a good period of time to try and create the project because it's pretty much the last thing I did for you all. From what I can tell, I chose a good time for it because the sun was in a pretty favorable position to start creating the project. For the majority of the project, everything went smoothly. I switched around the colors and the appearance of the sun and when I wasn't changing colors I was saving and putting frames in a folder. That went smoothly. The majority of the project was created in Photoshop, just with the exception of some adjustments to some frames. I was really impressed with the colors, the details, and the overall crispness of the project. Even though I'm the only person that does this project, there's a lot of attention to detail to it, even though it's a simple project. I had a good amount of detail to play with and I was able to create all that detail very well. I can't stand myself. I'm the worst at time lapse projects. I hate the fact that I do them but I just can't resist myself from doing it. If you're going to see this project though, make sure you click on the image and enlarge it. I really like the direction that the project went in. I think it's a nice contrast to the sun rising and setting project because it's very colorful and there's an overall feeling of energy coming off it. Overall Overall, I thought this project was a success. I think that the project is both simple and complex at the same time. It's a pretty cool project that can be used
